The Gilbert Clark Professional Development Award for Art Education

Many of Gil's professional friends have inquired about how they can make a contribution in his memory. Suggested by IU alumni and Dr. Marjorie Manifold, Coordinator of the Indiana University Art Education Program in the School of Education, The Gilbert Clark Professional Development Award for Art Education has been established. Gil was a faculty member who was dedicated to advocating for the inclusion of art in public schools. This award will help support those preparing to be art teachers who hold a BFA or BA degree in art and those who are working toward their Master's degrees in art education. Presently, in the IU Art Education Program, there is no monetary support for these students. The award is to be used to attend conferences, professional workshops, symposia, or other professional development opportunities as determined by the department. If you are interested in contributing in Gil's memory, checks can be sent to the IU Foundation and deposited into The Gilbert Clark Professional Development Award for Art Education with the award name on memo line.

Checks also can be sent to Mary Dwyer directly at the address below.
